SHERLOCK HOLMES-----	Eille Norwood
Dr. Watson-----	Hubert Willis
Mortimer Tregennis-----	Harvey Braban
Doctor Sterndale-----	Hugh Buckler

Down by the sea for a rest Sherlock Holmes and Watson looking through the window of a country house saw two men and a woman seated round a table cold in death. The cause of their death was obscure, but Holmes found some black powder on a lamp shade which he carefully collected. The following morning Mortimer Tregennis, brother of the dead person, was found dead in his room, and similar powder was on the lamp shade. Holmes experimented with the powder, and with Watson narrowly escaped death. He forced a confession from Dr. Sterndale, an African explorer. He admitted that Tregennis, having robbed him of some Devil's Foot Powder, a deadly African poison, had killed his sister and brothers and in revenge Sterndale, because he loved the girl, killed Tregennis. Sterndale produced a confession from Tregennis admitting the crime, and having promised to go back to Africa, Holmes decided to treat the case of Tregennis as a case of suicide.
